
Wolfgang Pircher

An Old Question of Figure and Ground: Engineer or Architect

Abstract

In early times the engineer and the architect were identical but anonymous. One and the same person committed the transformation of the natural environment into a technical landscape. The cores of this new landscape are fortified cities. Responsible for these fortresses was the military architect as an early engineer.

Keywords

Engineer, fortresses, land, landscape, military architecture.